

Becoming a Wildfowler – Dyfi, Mawddach and Dysynni Wildfowlers - Mentorship

A late starter

I only took up wildfowling in the last six years, despite a lifetime of shooting. Moving to live near the marsh created the opportunity, and being introduced by another wildfowler helped make that first step.

Although shooting had always been part of life, wildfowling offered something different — a deeper connection to the landscape. Living by the estuary and experiencing the environment firsthand made it a natural progression.

This place and community are as important as family tradition in shaping how some become wildfowlers.
